Glossary of Terms

BTU – British Thermal Units

The heat value of fuel – the higher the BTU, the more heat available for cooking.

Gas Cooking Systems

Conventional: A traditional gas burner usually covered with a metal V-shaped flame tamer. Cooks by circulating hot air around the food. Temperature range of 250 F to 650 F.

Infrared: System that produces heat, in which the heat penetrates the food and cooks without drying it out.

Cooking Grates

Chrome-Plated Steel Wire Rods: Resists rusting.

Porcelain-Coated Steel Wire Rods: Chip-resistant finish; rust resistant; resists food from sticking.

Cast-Iron: Even heat distribution; oiled (seasoned) grates resist food from sticking; high heat retention.

Porcelain-Coated Cast-Iron: Even heat distribution; resists rusting; resists food from sticking; high heat retention.

Stainless Steel: Rods or grates; resists rusting; high heat retention.

Auxiliary Burners

Side Burners: A circular burner usually built into the side shelf of a gas grill. (Sometimes designed with a high hood for use with a griddle.)

Ceramic /Sear Burners: High heat infrared burners used for searing; sears the outside of the meat to prevent juices from escaping. (Temperature range of 800 F to 1600 F.)

Rotisserie Burners: Burners set along the back of the firebox to prevent drippings from foods on a rotisserie from flaring up from the burners underneath. Can be conventional or ceramic.

Ignition types

Match / Lighter: Using a flame to manually start the fire.

Push & Turn: Pushing and turning the knob creates a manual spark.

Piezo: Electric starter that creates a single spark at the push of a button.

Electric: Creates a continuous stream of sparks as long as the ignition button is pressed. Battery operated.

Grill Material

Powder-Coated Steel: Dry powder coating process that creates a hard finish tougher than conventional paint; resists rusting; resists colour from fading.

Porcelain Steel: Powder glass fused to surface by firing at high temperature. Resists rusting, good heat retention, easy to clean, colour-fast.

Stainless Steel: A steel alloy blend of carbon steel and chromium to resist corrosion and staining.

Weber® full-size barbeques are designed for the long haul and built with the highest-grade materials to deliver Weber's proven performance, quality and durability.
